#	PLEASE STATE YOUR REASONS	DATE
1	It's not practical for people who live more rurally in Perth, how would they get all the way to Dundee? People may not consider their mental health to be at such a critical point where they have to travel that far to be seen. People have difficulty asking for help as it is without adding additional stress of additional travel, expense, distance etc.	10/6/2017 1:43 PM
2	This will isolate a lot of people	10/6/2017 9:03 AM
3	Beds in Perthshire are already far too few!!!	10/6/2017 1:25 AM
4	For those experiencing acute mental health problems being further isolated and further away from their home /family /community will have a significant impact. Poverty will mean that for some they will have no visitors. The time spent travelling for some in Perth and kinross to Dundee is also a factor and the cost of this. Additionally for those individuals who need a care package involving p&k organisations there would be less services able to travel to Dundee, this would also have a negative impact on individuals with mental health problems. I would propose carseview is closed.	10/5/2017 10:53 PM
5	I believe this will result in an increased risk to individuals with acute mental health needs. Due to its geography P&K need a service which is centrally based. This is not Dundee. It will increase the isolation of people in hospital, at a time when their support network is at its most needed.	10/5/2017 9:04 PM
6	The impact this will have across all communities, particularly those living rurally could be devastating	10/5/2017 6:51 PM

7	This is a political decision. It is not at all in the best interests of any possible patients, particularly those who live some distance from Carseview. This decision ignores the problems of access any patients might have. This kind of centralisation also limits services severely - it saves money because, theoretically, less staff and resources are needed, but it is a short term solution to a long term problem and simply creates more problems. In effect it will lead to less people being seen and therefore longer waiting lists - and this at a time when we are constantly told by the media of increasing numbers of people wishing to access services! (And being encouraged to access services!) This is a disgraceful decision. We should be providing more access, not less.	10/5/2017 4:22 PM
8	The inaccessability for patients and visitors from such a wide area as Tayside. caring - time to see Dr and Consultants not rushed through a system. Local involvement is necessary in healing particularly in mental health issues. The stress caused by travel is highly detrimental.	10/5/2017 2:08 PM
9	Perthshire is a wide area and carseview can be a long way away for many people to be able to visit - and visitors in hospital are extremely important.	10/5/2017 1:37 PM
10	Accute mental health beds should be local.	10/5/2017 1:28 PM
11	Accute mental health beds should be local.The further the distance from family and friends has effect on the fequency of visits by friends and family and consequently has a detrimental effect on the mental health and recovery of patient.	10/5/2017 1:22 PM
12	I dont see the point of building a new hospital mental heath, then after a few years close it. The visiitors from rural Perthshire that have to use public transport it not really feasable.	10/5/2017 1:12 PM
13	When I was in hosptial what helped me was being in familiar surroundings being able to see my friends.	10/5/2017 12:59 PM
14	Its just not practical!	10/5/2017 12:47 PM
15	Design and location of building Culture of care within Dundee is not positive Patient support/contact with local community/services Access to services Continuity of care Lack of open space Purpose built deign features of MRH: gym/art room/kiln/spiritual care / tribunal facilities	10/5/2017 12:42 PM
16	I dont agree as mental health patients dont have money or travel and more people would feel helpless if this service is stopped, mark my words if this service is stopped I have no doubts there will be more suicide in perth and perthshire/ keep this service.	10/5/2017 12:17 PM
17	Difficulty in visiting and providing family support from outlying areas. The population of Perth is forecast to increase substantially and therefore I think Perth should have its own services.	10/5/2017 12:04 PM
18	Murray Royal is local to me and when I was there I found it a great help/support that my friends could visit me. If it was not in Perth there would be less chance as it would be further to travel and those that dont drive could not come straight after work and still be home for child care.	10/5/2017 11:42 AM
19	Patients need to be close to family and friends for support.	10/4/2017 5:59 PM
20	Patients should have treatment available in their local area, some patients will miss out on visitors as many relatives, friends etc will not be able to travel to Dundee for visiting.	10/4/2017 4:58 PM
21	You are removing people from their local environment making harder for some families to support. Stop herding people like sheep. They have rights too	10/4/2017 12:59 PM
22	Distance factors for people living in rural Perthshire	10/4/2017 11:55 AM
23	It would seem more appropriate for services for local people to be provided locally particularly those of a crisis nature.	10/4/2017 8:44 AM
24	I think that in all cases people should receive treatment closest to their homes and not miles away.	10/4/2017 8:34 AM
25	Mental Health Services should be available to people within their own communities. Having to travel to Dundee for services is unacceptable and may not be an option for people in crisis. Individuals who find themselves suffering from mental health issues need help and support right away and this is not going to happen if services are moved to Dundee.	10/4/2017 8:16 AM
26	Travel time Mrh was gifted to Perth for me ysl health 500 houses being built No need to locate in Dundee will not save any money	10/3/2017 4:35 PM
27	Perth & Kinross covers a wide area at present and it can already be difficult for outlying people to get to Perth without asking them to travel further to Dundee. I feel it could cause deaths. it will add pressure to carers that are already very stressed	10/3/2017 4:30 PM

28	I feel this should go without saying, however at a very basic level, to expect individuals who have mental health issues to plan and attend appointments at Carseview, is absolutely ridiculous, and this is at a very basic level.	10/3/2017 4:12 PM
29	Carseview provides poor care in comparison to Mulberry and it cannot cope with the patients it already has.	10/2/2017 4:10 PM
30	1. It will make less people agree to an informal admission if they are further away from family & friends leading to increased detentions under the mental health act which will cause resentment between the patient and the services. 2. Less visits/visitors can lead to patients feeling isolated & lower in mood, or resentful towards family & friends for visiting less often. 3. Increased financial burden on family/friends/carers for travelling further to visit their relative Dundee instead of Perth. 4. Less beds for this patient group in Tayside WILL lead to vulnerable people DYING as they will be left at home in a crisis due to no beds being available.	10/2/2017 1:35 PM
31	Need a wider range of hospitals and places of safety all over Scotland. When my daughter was sectioned aged 16 she was placed in carseview. There were no beds available anywhere else. She ended up in the Priory in Glasgow!!!! Heaven knows how much that was costing the NHS	10/2/2017 8:15 AM
32	Too far for people in crisis to travel. I think it will endanger lives.	10/1/2017 9:12 PM
33	To aid the recovery of patients it is essential to have the support of family and friends. This proposal risks that these stakeholders involvement will be diminished.	10/1/2017 9:01 PM
34	This is a very poorly thought-out consultation that will move mental health care out of Angus, making it inaccessible for many patients and relatives to visit. It will also see a purpose built Unit at Mulberry - which only opened five years ago - closing. This is a ludicrous waste of public money.	9/30/2017 11:18 PM
35	Mental health services need to be as local and accessible as possible for the wellbeing and recovery of patients. Isolation from family and friends is not good for anyone who is ill in hospital; it must be easy for visitors to gain access. I also believe there will be fewer beds in Tayside in general for mental health patients, if these proposals are allowed to go ahead. The Mulberry Unit was purpose-built, and has only been open for five years, due to a prior review which lead to a huge reduction in beds across Tayside. We simply cannot afford for those beds to be removed from Angus - suicide deaths are already rising: local services should be increased, rather than diminished.	9/30/2017 9:16 PM
36	Cause people with mental health care issues should be cared for nearest to where they & they're families, friends & carers are.	9/30/2017 7:15 PM
37	Too far for relatives to travel to visit patients. Visits from friend and family are important to the recovery of each individual. Lovely surroundings and purpose built layout.	9/30/2017 5:32 PM
38	People are better served living in their own communities.	9/30/2017 5:10 PM
39	I feel there has been little or no consultation with service users, carers or staff regarding the closure of Mulberry. There will be transport issues for families and friends of patients trying to get to carseview. If there's no beds available at carseview patients could be in hospitals as far away as Inverness or Aberdeen, isolated because families and friends cannot afford to visit them. I know many service users who will refuse treatment at carseview due to its reputation which is not good	9/30/2017 11:33 AM
40	This will affect patient and families causing more distress mentally and financially	9/30/2017 11:11 AM
41	Centraliation of services for people with mental healthproblems removes fromthem,or makes more difficult, the social and community support they need. Once discharged, increased travel requirements may make ongoing support difficult or unattractive	9/30/2017 9:23 AM
42	Each person is a individual and each individual is different, but I think anyone going into a mental health institute has there own problems/issues, worries, illnesses ect. And would find everything hard enough without the problems of family and/or friends to visit if they live out of town and should go to where they feel most comfortable and happy and not to make things affordable. Stacey Williamson	9/29/2017 11:36 PM
43	The services should be kept localised	9/29/2017 9:15 PM
44	Unrealistic to send people to Dundee from Perth that have these problems. Causing more issues.	9/29/2017 7:18 AM
45	With the city growing in size I don't understand why there is a need to move mental health services further away, with so many recent young people passing away in perthshire, I feel it's necessary to keep services close enough to provide support.	9/28/2017 8:52 PM

46	There is a perfectly good, modern facility at Murray Royal in which to base some services. As a paramedic, there will also be increased pressure on the ambulance service to transfer patients over greater distances.	9/28/2017 8:40 PM
47	It isolates the patients. There's a stigma with Carseview	9/28/2017 11:32 AM
48	Distribute Centres so that friends and relatives can visit more easily. Also staff can commute more locally, all of which contributes to best teamcare quality. For meetings, family therapy, etc. Don't concentrate everyone in a single place, where patients may be incompatible, or respond better to different teams of staff. A sense of progress or a fresh start may be needed, helped by an alternative locations. A therapeutic and restorative environment is essential. I don't know what the architecture of this proposed 'supersize' place is, but simply for noise, orientation, and balance of in and outside spaces, smaller unit models must be a better design?	9/28/2017 6:42 AM
49	It will make it harder for families to keep contact with the patient and therefore can make it a more stressful experience for the patient. Carseview is not big enough to take all the patients in so some will not get the help that they need and are entitled to get. Some potential patients could be put off trying to get help because they would want to stay near home, not go to Dundee.	9/27/2017 9:03 PM
50	Not everyone lives in that vicinity	9/27/2017 4:24 PM
51	I think its an absolute joke people from perth having to go all the way to dundee for much needed help	9/27/2017 2:35 PM
52	It is important to retain local services. Perth is slowly being stripped of healthcare facilities.	9/27/2017 12:56 PM
53	Someone who is suicidal and doesn't want to leave their home isn't going to head off to another city for help no matter who is trying to convince or take them. Perth and the surrounding small towns (as far as 26 miles north remember?) NEED this facility.	9/27/2017 11:20 AM
54	If someone is feeling suicidal then asking them to go to another city would just add to their trauma .	9/27/2017 7:40 AM
55	Perthshire is a large area, Dundee is too far away fir many families to take someone, never mind police resources.	9/27/2017 6:57 AM
56	There are big travel issues fr faily and friends to visit and to stay in touch. It seems to be aimed mainly at the convenience of staff and the organisation rather than patient care and outcomes	9/27/2017 1:55 AM
57	Patients will be even further away from there supporters and family who help them with there recovery	9/26/2017 11:24 PM
58	There are a number of reasons but primarily I am of the view that Carseview is sadly lacking in a number of areas at present. It is both sterile and patient unfriendly while any sense of 'sanctuary' is sadly missing. I suggest that the changes in patient population over the last 20-30 years now includes an increasing number of young adults with addiction problems. I believe the current Mental Health care and facilities do not meet the broad needs of this patient population, especially older adults of 40+. An increased number of younger patients with addiction problems will have a further detrimental effect on the care and outcomes of the patient population in general. If I remember correctly, we shouldn't forget the quote by the then NHS Tayside chairman who described the hospital "not fit for purpose". I feel I could probably add a number of other reasons to explain my critical opinions, however, I don't think it would serve any useful purpose at this time. My clear view is that mental health care in Tayside and Carseview in particular needs a radical rethink - I don't think you need me to highlight that from a public relations perspective I'm afraid Carseview's negative publicity, especially over the last few years, is further testament to a very poor public image.	9/26/2017 11:08 PM
59	It is going to put vulnerable people at risk.	9/26/2017 10:24 PM
60	There is a huge mental health issue in Perth, and cutting services is exactly opposite to what we should be doing.	9/26/2017 10:21 PM
61	I think it should be available in more areas than just one. Carse view can't cope as it is let alone with more pressure	9/26/2017 10:18 PM
62	It is not easy for everyone to get to Dundee from other parts of Tayside. Not everyone has access to a car, have money or the ability to independently use buses and it's also a long time away from home for patients which will not help with mental health issues, especially those with anxiety disorders	9/26/2017 10:03 PM
63	Local accountability is best	9/26/2017 10:02 PM

64	It's too far away	9/26/2017 10:00 PM
65	Tayside happens to be so large,the outleiyng areas still need ,their units,you my be short,staffed for mentally trained,staff	9/26/2017 9:51 PM
66	I have mental health issues and a young daughter who I wouldn't get to see if I needed to be in hospital due to my mental health. I also have a father in law who has vascular dementia and his family are in Perth and have no means to visit if he was hospitalised outside perth	9/26/2017 9:44 PM
67	It would mean patients being placed quite far from home area. Would also be expensive for health and social care professionals travelling from their own outlying areas to manage cases.	9/26/2017 9:41 PM
68	My friend seeked help just short of a couple weeks from murray royal just weeks before committing suicide ! Beds and help should be allowed within perth if he got the help there and then then i believe he would still be alive	9/26/2017 9:40 PM
69	Too far away to travel when in crisis	9/26/2017 9:00 PM
70	Perth has such a large population it needs a facility on its doorstep. Perth and Kinross is such a large area that someone from pitlochry's family shouldn't have yo travel that distance. Family are important in the process of helping	9/26/2017 8:37 PM
71	They should be spread over the trust locality, local services for local patients.	9/26/2017 8:36 PM
72	why is everything Dundee, we need to have something here in perth for vulnerable people at the time not sending them away to another town its not right	9/26/2017 7:08 PM
73	We have a perfectly good hospital in perth	9/26/2017 7:00 PM
74	It is appalling that you deem this fit. That is only going to make matters worse in most situations. People need help, not sent away elsewhere. Surely they can be seen at some stage at a local hospital rather than making everything difficult for the individuals.	9/26/2017 6:38 PM
75	As a nurse at carseview this would help ensure that the best treatment is giving and adequate staffing numbers are available.	9/26/2017 6:35 PM
76	Tayside NHS covers a much wider area than Dundee and this proposal would lead to some people having to travel quite far for treatment which can be off-putting, e.g. I believe Neil Cumming refused a bed at Murray Royal when there wasn't a bed at Carseview and went on to murder his wife. Also I believe centralisation will lead to the number of beds being cut.	9/26/2017 6:15 PM
77	What good was it building the super duper new hospital at Murray Royal? £80 million wasted.	9/26/2017 6:14 PM
78	It very much depends on locality	9/26/2017 6:13 PM
79	To far away from Perth	9/26/2017 6:12 PM
80	It makes sense to have them on one location	9/26/2017 6:09 PM
81	Yes if there are going to be enough beds and isnt a way of making cuts.	9/26/2017 5:52 PM
82	I think this is absolutely ridiculous!!!! For a large region to only have access to beds in dundee is unacceptable! To try and get someone who has severe mental health issues out of their home to a unit in their own town is difficult let alone in a different one.Be it on your heads when the suicide rate rises!!! Bloody awful	9/26/2017 5:50 PM
83	Absolutely disgusting that all the facilities are getting moved from Perth. We are meant to be a city	9/26/2017 5:50 PM
84	Due to budget cuts the NHS are centralising emergency mental health beds to Dundee from Perth. I believe my friends brother would still be alive if Murray Royal didn't turn him away and tried to send him to Dundee, he took his own life just weeks after. If someone is suicidal and doesn't want to leave the house, then getting them to another city will just not happen!!! Let our voice be heard. It's important to our town, especially at the moment. Male suicide is at an all time high. These services need more money, not less.	9/26/2017 5:39 PM
85	To much in one place	9/26/2017 4:43 PM
86	My brother killed himself just weeks ago because Murray Royal couldn't take him and tried to send him to Dundee. HE'S DEAD BECAUSE OF THIS!!!!	9/26/2017 4:27 PM
87	Not enough beds	9/26/2017 4:22 PM
88	Dundee cannot cope with the amount of people this service needs to help	9/26/2017 4:16 PM

89	Perth requires to have facilities immediately available to help people suffering from any form of mental health issue and to allow them to be treated by people who may know them and treat them accordingly. Relatives and friends should also be able to visit on a regular basis to help with their recovery and have input into their self help programme.	9/26/2017 3:56 PM
90	Perth is in need of this service why is it getting moved	9/26/2017 3:27 PM
91	Yes because my cousin was begging for help and got refused from Carseview. 13 hours later he hung himself.	9/26/2017 1:48 PM
92	The staff should be trained to deal with their problems	9/26/2017 1:21 PM
93	It's allows all appointments to be done in one place	9/26/2017 1:20 PM
94	Is it right for patients to be together. Would other sites allow for a progression?	9/26/2017 1:07 PM
95	There should be more hospitals and help for mental health.	9/26/2017 1:00 PM
96	There are not enough beds. A larger facility should be built or spread more beds across the larger area.	9/26/2017 12:33 PM
97	I've had family there before and friends and staff have all treated them terrible, maybe if you retrain your staff	9/26/2017 12:26 PM
98	Inconvenient for those who live far from the area. Would make more sense to have clinics around Tayside	9/26/2017 12:21 PM
99	One main location and concentration of resources would seem to be the best option for patients.	9/26/2017 11:50 AM
100	I feel we do not have nearly enough help out there for our mental health sufferers I personally think there should be some sort of center people can pop into for some support when they are at their lowest ebb	9/26/2017 11:38 AM
101	Carseview is small and limited. Mental health issues are affecting more and more people every day. Other sites should be made available.	9/26/2017 11:37 AM
102	There is not enough provision for mental health services as it is and this will make a terrible situation even worse.	9/26/2017 11:10 AM
103	I think that it's really important for people with acute mental health problems to be within their own community as much as possible, with friends and family nearby. Isolating them, potentially quite far from their support networks, is dangerous and should not be done.	9/26/2017 10:36 AM
104	As a person with mental health issues myself, I understand how essential it is to have help and support in whichever form as close as possible and to have to travel away from your home to acquire this help can be extremely distressing and could potentially be impossible if you don't have funds or someone close by to help you. I have lived in Dundee all my life and I felt isolated in Carseview so I couldn't imagine how others would feel.	9/26/2017 10:34 AM
105	No I think you need more places as it isn't big enough and staff can't cope	9/26/2017 10:23 AM
106	I have had family that have previously used and needed the service at Perth it's vital it stays open. Especially for visiting etc which is important on them getting better	9/26/2017 10:05 AM
107	There aren't enough beds for the mental health patients of Dundee without surrounding area patients	9/26/2017 10:02 AM
108	Patients need the support from their family as well as the hospital staff. They are already scared and vulnerable and need to be close to what is familiar to them. Not everyone is in the financial position to be able to afford the traveling expenses to visit their loved ones	9/26/2017 9:46 AM
109	Centralisation always leaves communities behind, and is particularly damaging in the case of vulnerable people. It makes them more isolated from their support networks, and the feeling of being so far from home can be very frightening to someone with mental health issues. The government has committed to investing in mental health, and it should follow through on its promise instead of deploying damaging, cost-cutting measures such as centralisation.	9/26/2017 9:36 AM
110	As its a specialised unit.	9/26/2017 9:15 AM
111	We don't have enough beds for everyone. Unless the unit is expanded	9/26/2017 8:53 AM
112	It would be too much	9/26/2017 8:33 AM
113	Everything centralised massive region. Carseview will not cope. Struggling now	9/26/2017 8:29 AM

114	Carsview is not big enough for all who have acute mental health There should be a unit in a few areas These people need better support and there family's need support also	9/25/2017 8:26 PM
115	Carseview already under resourced and struggling with capacity at the moment. Carseview is not suitable for long term stay patients, particularly rehabilitation- staff do not have time to spend with patients or talk to visiting family members- tend to stay in office	9/25/2017 8:24 PM
116	They can't cope in there! They can't look after the patients they have.	9/25/2017 7:45 PM
117	Carseview can't cope with the amount of patients they currently have That's why there are so many suicides in Dundee	9/25/2017 7:11 PM
118	Not convient for everyone	9/25/2017 7:00 PM
119	Some families have no transport to visit their loved ones. Public transport is expensive and takes a long time from outlying areas. Only one hospital will soon become over full and people in desperate need will be turned away.	9/24/2017 3:32 PM
120	Why should Perth & Kinross loose it's vital Mental Health Services ? Making it more difficult for family & friends to support & visit those with a debilitating illness. The services at Murray Royal have been vital over the years & remain vital to our ever INCREASING community.....Dundee does not have the bed facilities to cope with centralising this service, therefor again it is those in most need that will loose out & self harm/suicide rates may, and will probably increase. There are not and never will be enough community nurses to save lives !!!!!!!!!!!	9/24/2017 12:27 PM
121	I feel that it is important to have Services local. Centralising Services would increase travel for service users, family, friends, visitors, and staff. I believe this would have a negative impact on people's recovery and access to services.	9/23/2017 9:56 AM
122	-We have a newly built mental health hospital here.. -The available beds are almost non existent as it is. -It greatly helps in connecting patients with local support in the community. -It cuts patients off from any their supportive friends or family they may have from visiting.	9/23/2017 9:49 AM
123	I don't really have an opinion on this	9/23/2017 4:14 AM
124	Carsview is not coping not managing the patients it has now. A young man was rescued from the river Tay again today!	9/23/2017 1:57 AM
125	That could take folk too far from their families	9/22/2017 11:16 PM
126	I think there are arguments for both sides	9/22/2017 10:45 PM
127	Perth needs this service just as much as Dundee. Dundee is too far away	9/22/2017 4:50 PM
128	The people of Angus need The mental health team at Stracathro as it's not only peaceful and more convenient for the individual and their families but I feel personally will reduce the overcrowding of Carsview Unit in Dundee that I experienced when I had to attend with a family member that was the transferred to Perth as there was no beds for him While there for several hours we were aware of how extremely busy the unit was	9/22/2017 7:50 AM
129	My daughter was refused proper medical attention when seeking help and was instead put through a court procedure that should never have happened	9/22/2017 7:31 AM
130	Local communities deserve to have local services that provide person centred care. Not financially driven decision made care.	9/22/2017 6:42 AM
131	People who live outside of Perth have to travel at least 30 miles to get to Perth never mind Dundee	9/22/2017 1:01 AM
132	I don't agree because carsview hospital is not fit for purpose treatment is a disgrace detained people can get out easy because it's not a locked unit so it's unsafe for mentally unstable people they have dementia patents in beside suicidal patients they only seem to think that if you don't show outward signs of mental illness then you are ok so making it centralised will be putting even more life's at risk	9/22/2017 12:05 AM
133	Traveling away from family to receive help for your mental health will cause more stress. Travel is costly. Perth deserves a local mental health facility. People deserve to have help locally and should not have to fight for this.	9/21/2017 11:38 PM
134	Tdetrimental to patients from outer lying areas to go to Dundee and for families having to travel further distances	9/21/2017 11:34 PM
135	I have been admitted to Murray royal previously and if I had to be admitted to carseview it would of made things a lot more difficult for myself and my family.	9/21/2017 11:17 PM

136	We need local support. Going miles away us not an option	9/21/2017 11:11 PM
137	I think there should be one nearer to us not so far away for the people who are in there it is more easier for visitors as some might not be able to travel to dundee	9/21/2017 11:09 PM
138	Don't understand why they would move it from a brand new facility specifically built for 24 hour acute mental health care for Perth and surrounding areas. I understand Carseview was an over flow facility for MoreDun Ward which shows this service isn't only needed it's in need of more care put in place! I don't know how the NHS expect a suicidal person who doesn't even want help in the first place is expected to travel to Dundee safely! This is not only putting them at risk but their family, friends and even the police too meaning more police time wasted!	9/21/2017 11:00 PM
139	Mental health is a huge issue and you are taking away what people of perth need! When you are in crisis there is not capacity to travel to Dundee, we need local help!! This is also going to put even more strain on the police and ambulance services.	9/21/2017 10:59 PM
140	It is vital that the local people of Perth and Kinross have somewhere close to seek the help they need for their mental health.	9/21/2017 10:53 PM
141	Both my daughters use the services in Perth and if moved to Dundee they would not be able to travel to use the service .	9/21/2017 10:51 PM
142	Why move it when it's in a facility specifically designed for acute mental health care in Perth and surrounding areas? I understand Carseview was an over flow facility for Murray Royal which indicates to me more beds are infact needed. The community mental health team can't cope as it is imagine how long a referral will take if the acute mental health services are moved to Dundee!? The suicide rates get higher every year especially in young men can you imagine how this is going to impact people when it's hard enough to get the help in the first place!	9/21/2017 10:51 PM
143	the fact that a perfectly good facility at MRH In perth is to be closed is so nonsensical it beggars belief	9/21/2017 10:49 PM
144	Mental health needs to be accessible for all, with all being centralised in Dundee you will find it impossible to most patients to attend and will cut off links to family	9/21/2017 10:45 PM
145	I believe the service is needed in Perth due to the need in Perth for mental health services and Dundee is too far away to travel for those with mental health problems.	9/21/2017 10:35 PM
146	Dundee is too far to travel when someone is suicidal. Why move it when Murray Royal Moredun Ward was purposely built for Acute mental health care in Perth! Absolutely ridiculous decision and the suicide raise increases year after year just imagine what effect this is going to have! I have been a patient in Moredun Ward and have recently had to be taken to Carseview by Tayside Police for emergency treatment and I don't know what I'd of done if it wasn't for the Police taking me there and bringing me home which may I add is not their job! Not only will this decision put more people at risk and put people off trying to get help it will waste so much Police time! May I add we had to wait nearly 2 hours to be seen or even speak to anyone at Carseview can't imagine how long that wait would be if all acute mental health beds are "centralised" or moved out of reach of people who so badly need it!	9/21/2017 10:30 PM
147	This service is very important for per th and surrounding areas. We just have to look at the recent suicides, the out of hours team are in Dundee and this is a huge mistake. Murray royal has had a lot of bad press but they have done a lot of good over the years. STOP trying to give all the money to dundee!	9/21/2017 10:27 PM
148	Distance Client in crisis being transported safely Family's struggling to visit Important for a person in a crisis to be closer to home Financial strain on family's getting back and forward	9/21/2017 10:00 PM
149	The people of perth and perthshire are entitled to get there needs met locally. How on earth are service users and thier families supposed to get back and forth to dundee. It will only add more stress to the service user as if they haven.t got enough on there plate.	9/21/2017 11:59 AM
150	Tayside is too wide a geographical area to concentrate in one city	9/20/2017 11:39 PM
151	As a member of the community who has mental health issues I feel that moving the service to Dundee will make me unlikely to receive the support I need as I cannot travel that far if and when I need help	9/19/2017 11:12 PM
152	Because it is impractical to expect someone to be transferred out of their own area(local support, family, friends etc) and what exactly will happen to Moredun ward?	9/19/2017 9:10 PM

153	Why make being hospitalised even more traumatic by isolating the ill person from their home town and family and friends. How much will it cost to transfer patients from their home town and back, doesn't seem very well thought out..	9/19/2017 5:37 PM
154	It is too far for people who suffer from this illness, plus they would have to get three busses. I just think its stupid. I'd rather it was Murray Royal as it wouldn't be too far to travel.	9/19/2017 4:48 PM
155	Murray Royal hospital is not fit for purpose building, physicists and staff. It is not a safe place, care of duty is not concistant and national practices & policys are not followed.	9/18/2017 6:39 PM
156	Geographically it's nonsense never mind morally	9/17/2017 12:18 AM
157	I believe it will end up cost financially more and also cost both patients and there families time and money due to travelling.	9/16/2017 9:01 PM
158	I would like it to stay local, it's hard enough to get family to visit Murray Royal never mind travelling to Dundee. Even as an outpatient it would be cost prohibitive to travel to Dundee. Perth is centrally located for a large number of smaller villages and this would allow easier access for them as well	9/16/2017 8:45 PM
159	Increased pressure on single sight, poor patient journey, evidence of patients travelling and waiting times to completion exceeding 8 hours.	9/16/2017 3:09 PM
160	It's better to have acute beds locally in my opinion	9/16/2017 3:00 PM
161	It will be harder for family members to visit there loved ones if they can not get a bed closer to home where ever that is	9/16/2017 2:35 PM
162	Too far.	9/16/2017 2:35 PM
163	people need the right to live in the city they belong to especially when it is long term this may work with short term only	9/16/2017 2:17 PM
164	There should be facility for acute care locally and I do not see why thatt requires a consultant psychiatrist on site 24 hours a day.	9/16/2017 2:09 PM
165	Too far away.	9/15/2017 4:41 PM
166	It is important to keep GAP Services local given the nature of acute mental health problems. Recently heard from a relative, who described being hospitalised in Carseview, as it appears the changes have already been made to centralising services! She described the anguish it caused her not being located in Murray Royal, where she had previously been a patient. This caused extra pressure on her, which would be the same for other patients. Her mother advises that even after having been discharged for a couple of weeks, her daughter has this time not "got back to her old self" and is on heavy medication. There was also the difficulty of visiting (again the same pressure on other families) and it is of utmost importance that people suffering mental health problems have a supportive environment, which must include visitors. The people cost implications in the longer term if the change is made to centralising GAP services at Carseview permanently will have a long term detriment to the service for people in Perth & Kinross. This will lead to worsening conditions of patients and will be more costly long term. Also the fact that GAP Services appear to have already moved to Carseview is extremely worrying given that the consultation ends on 3/10/17. Is it just a tick box exercise with a decision having already been made? Hopefully not.	9/15/2017 4:21 PM
167	Having spent time in Carseview I must say my condition worsened. The staff with one exception had no time for me. Had I not been moved to Murray Royal I honestly believe I would not have survived.	9/15/2017 3:52 PM
168	Too far for unwell ppl to travel Relatives visits would be much less because of financial and distance	9/14/2017 10:21 PM
169	There was a vast amount of money invested in new hospital at MRH incorporating a new acute admission ward for 16/65 age group. Unfortunately my understanding is that there were very few staff members involved in the planning stage of this build and decisions were made by strategic managers regarding the floor plan , size etc and this has proved to be the wrong decision. I think it is a disgrace that patients and family members to travel to Dundee.. Tayside covers a huge geographical area and this extra travelling will only cause unnecessary stress on patient and there families. This proposal is purely financially driven , along with all the other decisions that are made ie the integration of social and health care. It is never for the benefit of patients / service users.	9/14/2017 9:50 PM
170	Everything gets cut and centralised and it's wrong, some families can't drive and would therefore be cut off from ill relatives, having bee such a patient I know how important family and friends visiting are	9/14/2017 3:45 PM

171	Perthshire and Angus are massive areas in comparison to Dundee. Thus centralising it in Dundee would mean an even longer journey for the client who more often than not is very distressed.	9/14/2017 1:36 PM
172	If your a Perth patient in Dundee with no family or friends who drive,how do you get your belongings etc if you were rushed into hospital.	9/14/2017 1:04 PM
173	If families live in pitlochry it is a long journey to visit	9/14/2017 12:47 PM
174	Too far away, too big a hospital, away from familiarity	9/14/2017 12:19 PM
175	Perth is a city,,quite a big one with a lot of people needing easy access to help. It should be kept in our very good facility. Why should the people of Perth put up with this. 22 miles to access health care when we have hospitals of our own. An expanding city with a useless health service.	9/14/2017 10:31 AM
176	I think it is daunting enough for anyone acutely I'll admitted to hospital, some have to travel miles just to receive a bed often meaning their families struggle to visit often, causing added pressures and anxieties. Perth is central to the north and south of Scotland, millions of pounds has been spent for the new Murray Royal hospital to be built so I see centralising GAP services to carseview a bit of a waste really. And also the views of the service users should be highly considered before any decision is made as they are the ones accessing the services. It's ashame really that it has come to this day where we are playing with people's lives for the sake of saving money.	9/14/2017 8:45 AM
177	Most individuals have family in perthor surrounding area and if they moved it to dundee, not only would travel increase but the level of visitation would decrease and thus have a negative impact on the continued negative emotional state of the individuals using the service. I was personally taken into Murray Royal hospital for a 3-4 month stay and my family would not have been able to travel through daily to visit me and it was only with the constant support of my close family network that I was able to recover in that time frame. Stays in hospital may be longer or in some cases shorter as a want to return home is more prominent that a want to get the help required. If people were to return home too early it could encourage people to say they are well when they are not and may decrease their safety in.the community during rehabilitation to society	9/14/2017 7:31 AM
178	1. Not sensible move, already tough for people who are struggling, without being sent away from family and friends to unknown place 2. Implications for visitors - sometimes difficult to visit already but if moved to another city may become impossible 3. Patients become more isolated from friends and family	9/13/2017 9:56 PM
179	What about people with mental health problems who live in Perthshire.	9/13/2017 8:42 PM
180	Mental health patients, esp those in crisis, need daily support from family in order to progress. This is not going to be possible, esp for those with limited means, if travel to and from Dundee is needed. I live in Highland Perthshire, 90 mins from Murray Royal; fortunately I haven't had to be admitted for many years, but if I were to be, it would add an hour + to the journey time of my family visiting. Additionally, for many patients a gradual reintroduction to social interaction, shopping etc is needed. (including those being released from state hospitals) If this can be done in their local town, it makes it easier as it is more familiar. A day release pass from a Dundee hospital would be very confusing if you have no knowledge of Dundee. In the long term, this move would create more problems than it solves.	9/13/2017 10:04 AM
181	Distance & difficult for carers & friends to see patients.	9/13/2017 9:00 AM
182	People with Mental Health problems should be treated as close to home as possible. Perth is a huge geographical area and people have to travel far enough already. Family and friends might not be able to visit them in Carseview.	9/12/2017 11:38 PM
183	If you read board minutes NHS Tayside have all ready decided. I would only wish for the modern ward to be kept open if they bring all the phyicatrists, nursing staff and required health & safety up to the national standards because as it stands you should be warned "enter at your own risk"	9/12/2017 8:24 PM
184	It was hard enough to access services before they were centralised, let alone after moving them to Dundee. Perthshire takes in a large area and now ambulance and police services as well as relying on people's friends and family will have to take people that are already distressed mentally, through to Dundee rather than closer areas to be assessed. No crisis help apart from being directed through nhs24. Many situations could be delt with before bombarding Carsview with emergency appointments. Less beds will be available. It will isolate in patients, if family and friends have to travel longer distances to see loved ones	9/12/2017 7:43 PM
185	Makes it very hard for other family members eg young mums with children or the carer who is looking the users children and elderly relatives	9/12/2017 5:13 PM

186	No.It is already difficult to get help with mental health problems in Perth and Kinross without now having to travel to Dundee. The Murray Royal also has a better track record for treating mental health problems than Carseview. How will people who are very unwell get to Carseview?	9/11/2017 8:52 PM
187	Can/t understand the move when Murray Royal is a relatively new hospital. What will Moredun be used for afterwards? Are there any more wards to be moved under future policies? Can't help but think this move is the thin end of the wedge.	9/11/2017 7:31 PM
188	Will definately cause distress to patients and service users.	9/11/2017 7:21 PM
189	Local services are preferable.	9/11/2017 5:35 PM
190	Having been an inpatient at both Moredun B and Carseview I know this is a terrible proposal. Moredun B increases the speed of my recovery with single rooms and en-suite facilities. Carseview is much more like a prison and would definitely increase the chances of me delaying treatment due to fear of admission. I'm literally scared at the thought of ever going back to Carseview. I know my illness indicators which always follow a period of mania and I would definitely seek early intervention if I thought I would be admitted to Moredun B. If I thought I could go to Carseview I would delay treatment and hence increase the chances of doing something really stupid and this includes suicide. By going through with this proposal you are literally going to cost lives in Tayside.	9/11/2017 3:19 PM
191	Absolutely not when people enter a mental Health ward they are distressed and confused but o some bright spark thinks it better to send them to Dundee wasn't the building of Murry Royal for to benefit local people of Perth and Kinross and key to modern approach to dealing with mental health Dundee is way behind in its care atleast 10yrs	9/11/2017 3:12 PM
192	A lot of money has been spent building the new Murray Royal and services should be retained here for the people of Perth & Kinross and not farmed out to Caresview Centre in Dundee. NHS Tayside should be going all out to recruit and train staff to keep the acute ward open at Murray Royal. Centralising the acute mental beds at Carsewell will surely increase demand there and what happens if this unit cannot cope through time with the volume of admissions. Will they then have to look to employ more mental health staff or extend wards. Costing more money and also having the same problem they now say exists at Murray Royal.	9/11/2017 12:15 PM
193	I have been an inpatient in both units and the speed of recovery in Moredun B is far greater.I would be scared to seek treatment for a manic episode if I knew I was going to be admitted to Carseview.I would seek treatment early if the option was Moredun B.This could be the difference between life and death as I may end up taking my own life before getting the treatment required.	9/11/2017 11:48 AM
194	It is 140 miles from the west of the region to this facility. The facility has a bad reputation for making people unwell. The services are not local, and people who go there suffer.	9/11/2017 8:38 AM
195	People with mental health problems need their care close to home so that friends and relatives can visit as this helps their recovery.	9/11/2017 1:28 AM
196	Too far away from family and friends.	9/10/2017 10:53 PM
197	I think all areas should have access to clinics that deal in mental health issues.	9/10/2017 10:21 PM
198	I live in Kinloch Rannoch and its a tiresome journey in the back of an ambulance going to Dundee let alone Perth so I would not wish it on anyone.	9/10/2017 10:00 PM
199	I have used both the crisis team and inpatient and have had a chance to "test" the move to Dundee in a crisis which simply did not work. Ambulances and taxis to get there and back.	9/10/2017 6:01 PM
200	I have to use public transport from my home in Kinross. Visitor issue as well.	9/9/2017 8:41 PM
201	Each area needs their own in-patient services.	9/9/2017 7:08 PM
202	Travel time and costs No reason for it to happen Will not save any money A ward is a ward Murray Royal was gifted to the people of Perthshire for mental health Some people will have to do a 100 mile round trip to visit a relative Brand new hospital st Murray Royal for mental health	9/9/2017 6:18 PM
203	Never enough beds. Mental health issues on the increase. Staff at moredun provide an excellent service. Service users would have to travel too far for there care. It would be detriment to people ready to leave hospital . They would be less able to get time out and link in with support services before being discharged. People need support networks to help to recover and for some would make visiting very difficult and expensive.	9/9/2017 12:38 PM
204	Potential for more suicides in perth Potential for not asking for help due to having to travel to di dee	9/9/2017 12:28 PM

205	People should be catered for within their local community not in an alien environment which would undoubtedly cause undue stress and possible reaction.	9/9/2017 10:38 AM
206	It is too far away for those in highland Perthshire and there aren't enough beds as it is, taking them to Dundee will undoubtedly lower this already unsatisfactory number.	9/9/2017 9:47 AM
207	Visits to relatives in care can be really important for improving their wellness and I already live 30 mins away within Perthshire and moving the facilities to Dundee would stop the frequency of my visits to my family member. Distance/ time make a huge impact on how a family member can help support a patient.	9/9/2017 3:18 AM
208	Difficult for people to get there especially from the rural areas uprooting of the staff financially implications less accessibility to local services	9/9/2017 1:39 AM
209	People need to be as near to home as possible to assist in their recovery. Not helpful for someone wishing to visit their home for a short spell possibly with a nurse to sort out household things such as picking up mail, checking on their home and re adjusting to homelife by having frequent short visits while still in hospital. So important to have visitors often and that would be affected by the distance some people would need to travel.	9/8/2017 11:52 PM
210	Thanks build a good new hospital and people from all over Perth and have to travel to to Dundee an also being stressed at this, moment	9/8/2017 11:21 PM
211	Tayside is a huge region, people might receive less family visits due to money problems. Each area should have their own acute unit.	9/8/2017 10:32 PM
212	There is already a problem for people in Perthshire when looking for services and shortage and cuts in service. This is only going to exacerbate this. It is also so wrong on every level to expect people to have to be in hospitals so far away from their loved ones. This simply cannot be in a patient's best interest.	9/8/2017 10:23 PM
213	Grossly unfair for patients not to have local treatment. It will be a challenge for families to travel considerable distance to visit loved ones.	9/8/2017 10:21 PM
214	I know many people affected by mental health and Dundee is not an option for some. Perth claims to have a city status yet we are losing all our vital necessities in health care!	9/8/2017 9:57 PM
215	It is recognised that people should be treated near to their families. The extra miles make visiting almost impossible for people from rural areas and impossible for those relying on public transport	9/8/2017 9:45 PM
216	Perthshire is a large area and it's unfair to place people so far away from their support network when they're so ill	9/8/2017 9:44 PM
217	Too far away from Perth & Kinross.	9/8/2017 9:39 PM
218	Perth and Kinross covers a huge area and people already need to travel to Perth to go to Murray Royal. Further travel to Dundee is too much. Patients need familiarity and need family to be as near as possible and have access to visits. I think it is a disgrace, criminal even, to have spent all that money on building the new Murray Royal Hospital for a few years later to want to close Moredun Ward. Requiring patients to have to go to Dundee, in which I am lead to believe there will be less beds available. Just where will distressed people needing help go??? Because there is little to no support in the community. You do realise that suicides will increase? Maybe you really don't care because that is the message this proposal sends out. This proposal is ridiculous. People will suffer more and is a backwards step in the treatment of people who struggle with mental illness. Totally dismayed. But who cares, right?	9/8/2017 9:14 PM
219	It will be detrimental to people in need in the Perth area	9/8/2017 8:58 PM
220	It is too far away for most patients to have to get to. Visitors are essential to recovery in the majority of cases. Quite often they are unable to travel to Carseview either due to difficulty with the distance that has to be covered or require too many changes of buses that it is logistically not feasible.	9/8/2017 6:11 PM

#	WHY DO YOU BELIEVE THIS?	DATE
1	Currently, I believe, 2 people EACH DAY in Scotland are committing suicide - I am only surprised the figure is not higher. People are waiting a ridiculous length of time for any kind of appointment. As a result, their conditions are worsening. CMH teams are under huge pressures, as are GPs. A paradigm shift is desperately needed in the whole way in which our society deals with emotional problems. But one of the things needed is quick access to in-patient care for those individuals for whom it would be therapeutic - and for as long as necessary to ensure as great a recovery as required by that individual. I believe that most people would want to be treated in a non-hospital setting, but there are those who would find a stay in hospital helpful. They should be able to access this.	10/5/2017 4:46 PM
2	Sometimes it is safer for people to be an inpatient when they are very unwell and sometimes need to get away from everyday life for a while.	10/5/2017 1:41 PM
3	The number of people suffering from psychiatric illnesses is increasing.	10/5/2017 1:01 PM
4	As long as there are patients, we will always need beds.	10/5/2017 12:50 PM
5	Safety of person Assessment over a period of time Opportunity to be treated/assessed and supports in place on discharge Opportunity for multidisciplinary assessment	10/5/2017 12:46 PM
6	If your mental health state prevents you from being able live in the community, inpatient beds are a necessity. If you had a serious illness, you would expect access to a hospital bed, mental illness is no different.	10/5/2017 12:08 PM
7	Being an inpatient gives a sense of safety and security which is not always present on the outside.	10/5/2017 11:47 AM
8	To give support and help and advice a listening ear some are good at their jobs others not. Once you have a label they refuse to look at any alternative diagnosis. Guidance support and a willingness to listen nobody listens these days just because someone is ill doesn't mean that they can't have an opinion or say in their own care.	10/4/2017 1:13 PM

9	In times of crisis you need somewhere safe where you can't hurt yourself or others.	10/2/2017 4:13 PM
10	Sometimes for my own safety and that if my family it is important that I have a bed. Also I believe that, even tho the crisis team do a good job at home, I believe that sometimes the only thing required is s complete break from everything.	9/30/2017 5:39 PM
11	People in crisis need somewhere they can go so they feel safe.	9/30/2017 11:38 AM
12	In my relative's case, he was struggling with an ACUTE psychosis and he actually needed a completely secure ward. Due to lazy diagnosis, poor quality interpatient contact (in the company of very disturbed and negative other patient), inattentive, negligent staff, environment which was not just untherapeutic, with smell of smoking and pop music, (and, I think, a television channel i.e. unpredictable content streaming, but it was a while ago) Also abusive environment, by staying after visiting hours, witnessed a staff throwing crisp packets at patients to feed them supper). A female staff was judgemental of his disturbed behaviour, rather than trained and professional. He made two significant attempts to end his life outside the leaky 'compound' (Stratheden, Fife). Once into the river, the second, 'successful', onto the railway, where he beheaded himself on the line. At no point was there a family/staff round table sharing, or treatment plan discussed. No committed senior staff (Consultant on verge of comfortable retirement). A junior Antipodean locum 'in charge' of his treatment. An official enquiry was held and staff found to have set insufficient watch, been on mobile phone, or on 'break', despite first suicide attempt with a note left. He was survived by his widow, and three young sons, under 9 years.	9/28/2017 7:13 AM
13	I would like to qualify the above - I believe an increase in mental health in-patient beds should not be considered in isolation. The complete model and provision of care needs to be radically overhauled to reflect the changes and diversity of the current patient population.	9/26/2017 11:15 PM
14	Because people are having to travel to Dundee already	9/26/2017 10:03 PM
15	Beds tend to be last resort,how many of us are being lost to suicide	9/26/2017 6:22 PM
16	So many people suffer with a form of mental illness and a bed locally of required should be an option	9/26/2017 10:07 AM
17	There are not enough beds	9/26/2017 10:05 AM
18	Because I'm some cases this kind of care is in the best interests of the patient. However, this is only the case if the patient feels secure and comfortable whilst under in-patient care. If they're far from home this can be very distressing and damage their recovery.	9/26/2017 9:41 AM
19	Because people are poorly and some need that extra bit of help.	9/22/2017 12:49 AM
20	I feel for myself I was a risk to myself and my family. Had I not been admitted to hospital I don't know how ill I could of became	9/21/2017 11:20 PM
21	We need the right help in a setting in our own town, not more upset and distress to someone in crisis	9/21/2017 11:02 PM
22	The fact that Carseview has always been used an over flow for MoreDun Ward shows that these beds are not only needed they are lacking! Don't know how much more proof is needed to clarify these services cannot and should not be centralised!	9/21/2017 11:01 PM
23	Sometimes you just need to be in a safe environment and know you have somewhere to stay and get help	9/21/2017 10:56 PM
24	As I've said before Carseview is used as an over flow facility which proves in fact more beds are needed! If this service is moved it will the people who pay the ultimate price!	9/21/2017 10:53 PM
25	I understand that while I was in Moredun Ward Carseview was an overflow facility. This indicates that not only are the beds within Moredun Ward needed they actually need more! The community mental health team also needs to step up and take the pressure off Murray Royal as and when required! The wait for a referral to see a Psychiatrist is atrocious!	9/21/2017 10:34 PM
26	People in crisis are being turned away from care as they dont meet the said criteria. When will people be treated accordingly to their needs and illness, not a written ticking system.	9/19/2017 5:45 PM
27	Crisis	9/18/2017 6:43 PM
28	When I was there every bed was full	9/16/2017 8:47 PM
29	Because my daughter had to go to cortonvale women's prison for one week untill a bed came available which is absolutely disgusting but once in carseview her treatment was fantastic and she finally got diagnosed	9/16/2017 2:43 PM

30	There are times when patients with extreme depression quite simply need sanctuary.	9/15/2017 3:57 PM
31	People are in crisis which cannot be maintained in community safely	9/14/2017 10:24 PM
32	Because mental health problems are on the rise	9/14/2017 3:47 PM
33	for a place to be safe when we are hearing voices and seeing things and it is not safe for us to be at home	9/14/2017 12:23 PM
34	If there was not a bed available when I was needing it, I fear for what I may have done to myself. Even though I was in control I was doing things to endanger myself. My family would have had a knock on impact and they would have suffered greatly. They were already suffering with the stress of day to say life with me so had I not been able to be admitted and get the required support,my familys own mental health could have suffered as well as my own. I feel a lot of people are in these positions where their families try and help all they can but as they are not used to dealing with such fragile circumstances and they are so close to them that they are unable to refrain from getting upset themselves as it affects them to see someone they love struggling so much	9/14/2017 7:35 AM
35	Several reasons: 1. There are times when a person in crisis needs a place of safety, where they can be listened to, cared for and guided forward. It may only be for a short period, but that time out is critical to the bigger picture. 2. If new meds are being trialled, it's vital that the person is safe as the (unknown) action of the meds might render the person dangerous to themselves. A couple of meds I've been prescribed over the years have caused me to feel very weird, doubting myself, unable to function "normally". 3. Mental illness can be isolating; short term admission can help greatly in re-establishing social interaction, thus building confidence and renewed ability to function. Esp if you live in a remote area, where MH "community" services are thin on the ground. In past admissions, I have entered the ward feeling completely cut off from the outside world, very introverted and uncommunicative; spending time with other people around has gradually brought me out of my shell. I started to speak to the occasional person and eventually got my inner confidence back. I was then quite happy to be discharged and able to function "on the outside". A vital intervention	9/13/2017 10:27 AM
36	Need somewhere safe & impartial to go to when in great difficulty.	9/13/2017 9:07 AM
37	There is not enough community care available for extreme situations especially if patients haven't been taking their medication properly or if they are actively suicide	9/12/2017 8:01 PM
38	They provide a place of safety and help is at hand. It is easier too for the patients relatives and friends knowing that the patient is getting the correct help	9/11/2017 8:58 PM
39	There are acute stages in a psychiatric illness that may require a stay in hospital	9/11/2017 7:38 PM
40	Extra support during crisis saves peoples lives and gives them the right environment for recovery to happen	9/11/2017 7:23 PM
41	When people have lost touch with reality care in the community is not relevant.	9/11/2017 5:40 PM
42	Sometimes I'm so ill that I need to be locked up and treated in a safe environment.	9/11/2017 3:22 PM
43	When people are in crises they need to know when admitted into a mental health ward the are safe and get appropriate care	9/11/2017 3:16 PM
44	I believe that mental health beds are needed as in many cases it is important for the patient to have professional care in a safe environment until they are able to have their condition stabilised and well enough to go home.	9/11/2017 12:22 PM
45	When I have a manic episode I need to be in a safe and secure place to recover.Moredun B is the best facility for this.	9/11/2017 11:54 AM
46	Because we would be out on our ear if we didn't.	9/10/2017 10:25 PM
47	In my own case when I am ill I definitely need hospitalisation.	9/10/2017 10:03 PM
48	Because I need them myself and have used them. I needed inpatient care but there were no beds so I was with crisis team for 7 weeks	9/10/2017 6:05 PM
49	Cannot cope alone in my house.	9/9/2017 8:45 PM
50	Sometimes people need to be looked after if they are in mental distress, they can be diagnosed properly and helped.	9/9/2017 9:50 AM

51	People need safety and security when they are unwell also staff that are there to listen and talk to them with empathy also they need meaningful therapy or occupational therapy that used to exist also decent nutrition as for many people they have not had proper food	9/9/2017 1:50 AM
52	People in distress need support and a safe place. In-patient beds are required but so to is therapeutic environments with non-judgemental staff. Patients should not feel a burden or be made to feel guilty for needing care.	9/8/2017 9:21 PM
53	There are times it is not safe to stay at home.	9/8/2017 6:16 PM

1	Due to a lack of resources and staff, and a large number of short term admissions, any therapeutic value was lost. Staff had no time to talk to, or more importantly, listen to patients. Staff did not have time to organise any 'activities' so very unwell people were thrown back on their own resources - which because of illness, were very few. This led, understandably, to all sorts of disruption and disturbing behaviours. Staff were obviously under extreme stress themselves and this impacted on their attitude and ability to care for patients. The ward was a very noisy, disturbed place. There was no peace and no privacy. I felt unsafe and uncared for. This contributed to already existing feelings of worthlessness and made my condition worse.	10/5/2017 4:46 PM
2	Caring staff who listened when I needed to speak about feelings/concerns safe environment-ward/garden/bedroom/sitting rooms Other patients going through similar experience Accompanied to town/house in early days	10/5/2017 12:46 PM
3	Staff were very pleasant and spent time chatting and making you feel at ease but never forced to do anything.	10/5/2017 11:47 AM
4	I couldn't take an overdose or cut my wrists.	10/2/2017 4:13 PM
5	Mostly felt I could go to someone if I felt very unwell. Sometimes felt threatened by other patients who were very unwell	9/30/2017 5:39 PM
6	I was very ill and fighting the constant urge to harm myself. Staff would shout at me to stop. Must say that this was in England	9/30/2017 11:38 AM

7	I can't recall how this line of enquiry has developed. I have received medication, and GP consultation time for depression. I am explaining that my brother needed a truly safe place in which to either get well, or be persuaded that life would be worth living with supportive medication and/or ongoing therapy. He was extremely intelligent, he was not in hospital because he was stupid, despite his employment being unskilled and unvalued, he was simply in crisis. He needed non-stupid, dedicated people of integrity to care for him professionally. Currently I would like to experience a periodic recall from my GP for a review of my treatment plan. When one is struggling mentally, one cannot always judge what the next best step is, or when one is ready for it. Unlike a physical illness or an injury, the very part which normally guides one's bodily welfare is the part which is ailing. I cannot complete this survey personally as it does not apply to me, unless I advocate in memory of my dead brother. Please interpret the answers which follow as applying to him, as far as I can recall events.	9/28/2017 7:13 AM
8	It would have been very easy to fool staff i to thinking i was safe from myself	9/26/2017 6:22 PM
9	I felt that a lot of the staff were laissez-faire with my treatment, like it was just a job for them as opposed to a career.	9/26/2017 9:41 AM
10	I knew I had someone right there in the flesh when I needed them. Some responsibilities were taken from me ilminating the stress they bring. I was strongly encouraged to 'do' self care.. I.e wash, dress, try socialise, practise good sleep hygiene. But at the end of the day there were still ways I could harm without others knowing, if I wanted to. But that was something I hand to learn once in therapy.	9/23/2017 11:47 AM
11	I was monitored at all times.	9/21/2017 11:20 PM
12	Their is the right help and support and when things are hard you have someone to help you see things differently and that their is hope in life	9/21/2017 11:02 PM
13	NHS staff did the best they could, but there will still situations of violence	9/20/2017 11:42 PM
14	There was help on hand rather than a voice at the other end of the phone making vital judgements	9/19/2017 5:45 PM
15	Staff to busy, staff never free, no therapy offered, fear of other patients - bullied, loads of items at hand to self harm.	9/18/2017 6:43 PM
16	My daughter was all over the place before going in to hospital but after leaving she is managing much better because she has a diagnosis for her mental health conditions	9/16/2017 2:43 PM
17	Not in Carseview. Q17 - The part in Moredun. Q21 - In Moredun.	9/15/2017 3:57 PM
18	Felt supported and understood	9/14/2017 10:24 PM
19	There were not many staff and due to my state of mind I did feel vulnerable	9/14/2017 3:47 PM
20	The ward was locked, so the parameters had to be observed. I had urges to run away, to be free, but also urges to hurt myself. Mostly the fact that the ward was secure and had a regime to be followed, made me feel calmer inside. If other patients were a threat, I could stay away from them. If I felt sociable I could interact with them. Staff were supportive, but most of all, were just "there"; unless you went out of your way to hide from them, they observed if anyone was not coping well. The ward was warm; I had my own wee space - I could be me without being in fear of myself or anyone else	9/13/2017 10:27 AM
21	Definitely but other patients could make it less so.	9/13/2017 9:07 AM
22	I believed I was in safe hands. I did not have access to anything to harm myself with e.g. large amount of medication , illegal drugs, weapons or other items that could harm me. I felt that I would now get the care I needed in a supervised manor	9/12/2017 8:01 PM
23	As above	9/11/2017 8:58 PM
24	There was a particularly aggressive patient when I was in hospital. He made me fearful on occasions.	9/11/2017 7:38 PM
25	I didn't always feel safe from myself but that was more to do with my illness	9/11/2017 7:23 PM
26	I wasn't safe on my own	9/11/2017 3:16 PM
27	I had confidence in the nursing staff keeping me safe and also secure in the unit until I was better.	9/11/2017 11:54 AM
28	It was a place of sanctuary from the outside world as I perceived it at the time.	9/9/2017 9:50 AM

30	Lack of staff. You are simply medicated and left. Lack of therapeutic activities. Other distressed patients left without support can make hospital stays frightening and confusing. It can be an isolating experience with an US and THEM mentality between staff and patients.	9/8/2017 9:21 PM

I appreciate that they see me as being disengaged but there were genuine reasons I couldn't attend at the times they offered me. It was also incredibly difficult to talk to anyone about it - I would leave message on answering service that I couldn't do it then would be sent another appointment in post, there was no scope for discussion about why I couldn't make the appointments they gave I tried attending appointment in past with children in tow but they were very clear that they wouldn't see me	9/23/2017 4:19 AM
12	I was told they could no longer help me, my condition was not considered bad enough. They had to use their resources on folk who were bipolar or schizophrenic- meaning this suicidally depressed woman had to manage without any support	9/22/2017 11:34 PM
13	I was living in Perth at the time I was seeing my CPN who I got on really well with and trusted. I was then given a permanent tenancy and moved over to Blairgowrie and my support from Jackie had to stop. I was transferred to a new CPN who I didn't get on with and then again to another one who I also didn't find approachable or helpful, I was very disappointed that I couldn't seek support from Jackie anymore as she was amazing.	9/21/2017 10:40 PM

20	I was offered DBT. I was informed after treatment I would be cured. Would no longer have a diagnosis of Borderline Personality Disorder. It was false hope. I dropped out of DBT as I could not cope for many reasons. So because the CMHT had decided that DBT was the best option of treatment because I dropped out I was discharged from the CMHT. This was never fully explained and I argue that DBT is not a one size fits all. I was made to feel guilty of dropping out and made to feel a failure and basically left to fend for myself. My mental health has continued to decline and I was informed to go to GP to ask for a referral back to the CMHT. I did so in December 2016 after my mum died. It is now September and I have not been seen by the CMHT. I was instead referred to the Social Work MHT... and when talking to them I am told I really ought to be discussing my issues with the CMHT. It took me so much courage to ask for help in the first place and feel there is no point asking again as they have made it clear they do not want to or cannot help me. Of course, having BPD I am automatically considered by most professionals as difficult and a waste of time.	9/8/2017 9:32 PM

17	Friends, family and GP in that order, in my case. Offered psychologist's input when mildly suicidal, but medication and family commitment was sufficient, in crisis, for me. For my brother, his suicide was the result of multiple failings by family, friends, his religious 'community' (Jehovah's witness wife and 'Elders'- which is effectively a closed cult), the medical profession - his wife had recently had a lifesaving abortion of a dead foetus. He had overwhelming pressures, his birth family were excluded from information by all of his daily contacts. A team meeting of health professionals at all levels and birth family relatives, life affirming visits from his young sons, protection from ward stimuli he found distasteful even in his 'sane' culture, would have saved his life. 4 quotes from him " One Flew INTO The Cuckoo's Nest"(He had seen the Jack Nicholson movie before his 'conversion'). "You Saved My Life, Rosie"(I assisted to get him sectioned - for his own 'safety') and "I just need a place to be mad for a while", "I don't want to be a shuffler" (A person, with whom he shared the ward, and feared/dreaded to become, who were effectively 'zombies'(living dead) from medication or their closed up condition. Our grandfather was incarcerated for 30 years until he died for having schizophrenia, and our uncle, his son,died from progressive and at that time, untreatable epilepsy in the same hospital. Only the birth family could have contributed that information for his 'back story', in time to help understanding of his plight.(Beimers vs NHS 1993-5)	9/28/2017 7:39 AM

1	Whilst I have not used inpatient resources my sister and mother have in the past year. Both times they were held by police until a bed became available...30 miles away in Fife because none were available in Perth! There was also talk of having to going to England! Them being 30 miles away had a profound effect on their recovery and our family as a whole	10/6/2017 1:31 AM
2	Waiting lists far too long. Cbt does not deal with why people are depressed. Need a service that is person centred, flexible with other approaches emdr / eft. More investment in treatment not medication.	10/5/2017 10:57 PM
3	I think my answers so far speak for themselves. But I would say this: I have a relative who lives in Perth and has used NHS Tayside Mental Health Services for many years. I use other NHS services and obviously from time to time we have 'compared notes', so to speak. I have always been impressed, and not a little jealous, of the quality of services she has received when she has needed them so badly. Apart from anything else, it is a great pity that NHS Tayside is choosing to tarnish the good reputation it has had up to date for treating people in a humane and dignified manner.	10/5/2017 5:07 PM
4	I have had the use of mental health services primarily through my GP referral. after seeing the psychiatrist for a period I was passed on to a CPN. This was fully discussed with myself. I have also had dealings as one of my sons required and still requires the support of mental services. if this had not been local, the family support would have proved difficult for us both and the expense of travel would not be welcome. I live in Perth so transport (public), to is available. That is not so in places further afield, to Dundee.	10/5/2017 2:26 PM

5	CPN has been excellent. a while since been an inpatient but in the 80's the nurses had more time for you than in the 90's and 2000's. then you had to knock on the office door to try and see someone. - in the 80's the nurses were around alot more. I have been lucky with my recent psychiatrist, who is helpful and listens properly.	10/5/2017 1:56 PM
6	Canr think of anything at the moment.	10/5/2017 1:06 PM
7	Perth services are excellent. Staff are always professional, kind and caring and go that extra mile. The ward is safe and provides space for patients with other facilities for rehabilitation and relaxation. The grounds are spacious are allow time to walk and reflect or spend time with family and you can walk into the town with staff or by yourself. The foyer area has a café which is used by all and is welcoming and reduces the stigma and them/us feelings. I would be happy to be admitted if required in future to Perth but I would never allow myself or family to be admitted to carseview and have included this in my advance statement. Previous experiences of Carseview have been negative and I have met numerous people (staff and Patients) who have shared this view.	10/5/2017 12:51 PM
8	Yes, NHS is vital to the community in all departments, mental health is vital for people who need help. I believe if this service is stopped people will not hesitate to self harm or suicide with no mental health wards. Also jobs for NHS will be cut. Also with all services how can you keep cutting services as Perth is growing every day. Both population and commercially with more houses the more you keep cutting services the more we as people suffer. Perth needs surgery, MENTAL HEALTH WARDS and SERVICES Perth and Kinross needs to grow as community not even more apart. Please STOP!!! Thank you	10/5/2017 12:40 PM
9	The Staff at Murray Royal took time to listen and find out how I was and how I was feeling. They did not force anything and it was their friendly way and advice that gave me the encouragement that I should set up my own business. Now 7 years down the line and with all the ups and downs, I have to thank them for their encouragement. Listening to others that have had some time in inpatient beds else where - Murray Royal seems different, friendlier, and more helpful environment than, the attitudes of others of geting medication sorted then punting you back out to the local community teams that are already over stretched.	10/5/2017 11:57 AM
10	I work with the homeless population in Perth and Kinross , most of whom suffer from and endure some form of poor mental health, whether mild, moderate or severe This client group often live chaotic lifestyles and have encountered social exclusion and troubled upbringing. They often require Mental Health services Many of my clients have been in-patients in Murray Royal Hospital and as it is local , it is beneficial to the patients that their friends and relatives can visit without expense and travel, this can promote a quicker recovery. To have patients travel to Dundee for assessment and treatment , whilst their mental health is very poor, is ludicrous and damaging to the individual	10/5/2017 10:42 AM
11	It needs far more funding from government it is being used as a scapegoat to save money. Even the local charity support groups are affected by the cuts and some are no longer in existence, the NHS for mental health services are being squeezed dry by cut backs regardless of what part of the country you live in.	10/4/2017 1:31 PM
12	Carseview ward 1 is shambolic. Very poor care, lack of attention to detail. Ward 2 is far better and the staff are more professional in their approach.	10/2/2017 4:17 PM
13	I have nearly always received good care. I have put in suggestions in hospital about having more groups/exercise programs. And also having healthier food. Think this could still be improved on. The home crisis team have been amazing. In particular jim whyte.	9/30/2017 5:47 PM
14	I think there could maybe get something like a stopping ground for from the moment your gp puts your referral in until your 1st appointment with your physiatrist. I feel I don't get enough help in between waiting on my 1st appointment like I am right now, I recently told atleast 2 of my local gp's I have suicidal thoughts and have PTSD, also have recently lost a very good friend due to suicide because of mental health problems and not getting the right help, plus I am severely disabled and have elhers danlos syndrome. I have a real lot going on in my life and am at the doctors every week yet I'm still with no help and waiting on an appointment with my physiatrist. Hopefully use will actually listen to these surveys and hopefully we see some changes to mental health and the NHS within the near future ??.	9/29/2017 11:58 PM

15	The NHS has saved every one of my family from life threatening physical conditions, for which I am immensely grateful and proud. The exception in my life is the failure of Mental Health Provision. I know subsequent patient(s) have died IN THE SAME WAY at Stratheden. I have been too griefstricken to revisit this area of my life personally. Please do everything you can to coordinate holistic healing environments for mentally ill people, matching their cultural needs in a varied CHOICE of settings. Healing, aesthetically designed retreats, with productive and creative therapeutic activities for acute illness are still relevant. Even I find it hellish to try to thrive in an urban, non-communal environment with chronic mental illness, how much worse for people whose perception of 'reality' is even further from happiness. I think regular reviews of anyone on medication could be a formal, required part of General Practice prescribing, especially when medication is given free, and costs a huge amount. There is no provisional plan for how or when I stop taking antidepressants successfully. I have been able to function better, with voluntary and part time employment, and sketch future goals for myself, because I take them. As soon as medically trained staff knew my sister in law AND my brother were mentally unwell, their circle of support should have been alerted, invited to meet and share information - background, contributing circumstances, and possible positive treatment options. Instead it was a shambles of crisis management, lack of leadership, communication and low quality care by staff.	9/28/2017 8:08 AM
16	My responses to a previous questions have outlined my experiences and opinions of current NHS mental health services. I remain absolutely convince a radical overhaul in design and delivery of services is required.	9/26/2017 11:33 PM
17	The clinical psychologist was so patronising and made me feel terrible. Her choice of language was unacceptable	9/26/2017 8:54 PM

19	My mother is in murray royal just now & it would be an upheaval if she had to go to dundee	9/26/2017 7:03 PM
20	At one point a psychiatrist refused to refer me to a psychologist as I had had "my turn". My turn had been described by a psychologist as purely fire-fighting - it was 14 years before I saw a psychologist again. Another psychiatrist told me as a I had a degree in psychology I would have to see to myself! My degree was not in clinical psychology. I find the psychologists the most helpful of all staff, but it has been so difficult to access them in the past, at least.	9/26/2017 6:35 PM
21	More connectivity and cohesion between psychology and psychiatry	9/26/2017 6:34 PM
22	GP at Wesrgate has been brilliant. This is recent. Pschologist using CBT 25 years ago was essential to my development. And I know from others that we really lack the capacity to help many people who need help.	9/26/2017 1:14 PM
23	There should be somewhere where suicidal patients are seen too noatyer what. Doctor's should listen to the parents of the child/adult. They're the ones living with it too. Should be more mental health nurses/doctor's in surgery's to assess patients for carsview doctors are not phyciatrists.	9/26/2017 12:11 PM
24	I feel that I am excluded from the decisions regards my care weather in or out carseview	9/26/2017 12:05 PM
25	I went to my GP in Dundee having had a mental health crisis, and although I was feeling better, they offered me very little support beyond medication. I had already researched medications so I was aware of which ones seemed most likely to help me, but when I asked for a referral into adult mental health services, they said the waiting lists were so long "I'd probably feel better by the time it came through" even though I've had chronic depression and anxiety for over a decade. I was still recovering from my MH crisis so I was not in a state of mind to be able to push for it, even though I have never been seen by anyone other than a GP (I've had a long chain of GPs across various NHS regions tell me that the waiting lists are too long and I should just try to go private, which I can't afford). I would really appreciate a psychiatric assessment and CBT or other helpful treatments, rather than various GPs going through their checklists and offering me medication. The meds help, but I'd rather look at long-term solutions as I've had several times where I've missed updating my prescription and felt really awful for weeks until I got more, which is not ideal. Any time I try to challenge this by asking for a referral, I get brushed off and made to feel like I'm wasting their time.	9/26/2017 10:43 AM
26	No	9/26/2017 10:36 AM

27	NHS Tayside has failed in it's duty of care to it's most vulnerable patients by offering some of the worst mental health care provision in Scotland. Instead of investing to improve it's services it is cutting and centralising services which will DEFINITELY lead to a poorer experience for the patient, and in some cases may even endanger them. The consultation put forward by NHS Tayside is for display purposes only, they will go ahead and do exactly as they plan to do regardless of public opinion, the opinion of staff or the experiences of service users. I would urge the government to step in and work with the health board to ensure that services across Tayside are adequately provisioned and will protect the vulnerable people they are duty bound to serve.	9/26/2017 9:46 AM
28	It would be better to have the support of cpns ect sooner. In my case I had little help, was subject to waiting times and had no offer of counselling until I attempted to take my own life.	9/26/2017 9:18 AM
29	Too disjointed, the local gp and the mebtal health centres are not fully in sync. Practice GP's are failing patients by not understanding problems. People with mental health issues need proper expert advice and support. Not simply a prescription for an anti depressant from a gp	9/26/2017 8:35 AM
30	Rehabilitation very poor - carers should be more involved in discharge plans - thought this was meant to be happening- particularly when someone has spent a lengthy time in the CPU unit - rehabilitation team too quick to cancel services at short notice happens too often - no thought of the impact this can have on individual - patients being discharged with when they are still very ill with the pretext that they will be looked after at home - then left totally isolated when services cancelled - has significant impact on person and family members who are already struggling to cope	9/25/2017 8:32 PM
31	Psychologist has been very helpful, but it took 9 months between being signed off from work to actually getting to see someone. Mental heath ( as opposed to psychology) I have never managed to actually see anyone despite numerous referrals. I can't figure out what I am doing wrong	9/23/2017 4:22 AM
32	The Unit is essential to the Angus area for patients and family members visiting poverty in and around the area is high and transport links to Dundee is very poor and costly Familiarity for patients accessing the unit in a rural area aids to recovery therefore reducing costs in the long term	9/22/2017 8:04 AM
33	Keep services local in Perth	9/22/2017 7:00 AM
34	Please don't move it all to dundee, there are alot of people who need that support closer to home.	9/22/2017 12:52 AM
35	I feel like a lot of young people are at a very high risk. The rate of suicides in Perth is rising and it is being treated as a tragedy for a brief moment and then swept under the carpet. Mental health issues are not discussed openly enough, there needs to be a better understanding of mental health issues, especially to those who are close minded in Perth. No one should be left alone to struggle. Young people are self harming, taking drugs, drinking and doing anything that can numb the pain. Why is this seen as acceptable? Why should I even have to type this. Moving these services to Dundee is ridiculous and unacceptable. There will be blood on your hands.	9/21/2017 11:45 PM
36	I have been through a couple of very distressing situations whilst seeking help. On my very first occasion when I was admitted to MRH in Perth I was taken there by an ambulance from A&E in PRI after a miscarriage. I was left in a tiny waiting room for 3.5 hours before being seen by a CPN and a Psychiatrist by that time it was 02:30am and I was knackered, distressed and have had enough and just wanted to return home. The second time I was sent over for a psychiatrist examination from my GP surgery after suicidal attempt at home two days before that and yet again was left in the tiny room on my own for 3 hours waiting to be seen and by that point yet again I was knackered and have had enough. I've also been referred to a psychiatrist and was advised id be seen every 3 months. I saw him in January 2017 and was due back in April/may time but by the time July came and I haven't heard anything and have yet again attempted suicide I called up, when a new appointment came for me I couldn't make it as I was away visiting family back home in Poland and asked for the appointment to be re scheduled. The appointment was rescheduled for January 2018!! Which would have been a year after my last appointment but after help from my GP she got in touch with them an managed to get me an appointment very quickly which was lucky.	9/21/2017 10:55 PM
37	I dont feel there is enough support for young people in my area.Massive waiting lists etc	9/21/2017 10:54 PM
38	My daughter received a very different package of care from psychiatric hospital. She ain't living now Community mental health team ( social worker) was excellent with her	9/21/2017 10:08 PM
39	There was always a feeling that the staff who actually cared about patients were overruled by the staff who cared about metrics. (specifically Moredun Ward)	9/20/2017 11:47 PM
40	Mental health is not treared fairly, you have very little choice in what happens to you and where you are sent even if it is detrimental to your wellbeing.	9/19/2017 5:50 PM

41	Receptionist was very slow and was rude at one time. I have noticed a change in the receptionist... Which is better.	9/19/2017 4:57 PM
42	I have no faith in NHS Tayside Mental health team. I have to call to chase up appointments when told i will be seen every 2/3 months in reality its more 6/7 months. I write all of what I wish to discuss down and its never really discussed papers taken from me & put in my notes. Phycatrists never seams fully focussed on me as a person & sits looking up medication book most of the 10 min max appointment. No other treatments/therapy is offered. One phycatrists "I am only the medicine man" after being rescued by police trying to end my life on the railway bridge they took me to crisis team seen by a CPN "we both know you dont need to be here give me a couple of lines and I will give you a couple of diazepam to take when you get home" "called a attention seaker" I was never assessed my phycatrist & sent home with police. Who couldnt belive what had just happened and I was sent on my way home. Once I did complain & received a horrible responce saying it was my illness & I had refused treatment in the past. I still dont think they had read my notes which have been lost/mixed up with another patients with exactly the same name for years.	9/18/2017 7:05 PM
43	We need to retain local services	9/17/2017 12:22 AM
44	I took my family just over one year to get me properly diagnosed and placed in hospital if it wasn't for my family asking for help for me I honestly think I would not be here today far to long to get in hospital for a diagnosis	9/16/2017 2:47 PM
45	Excellent care in Perth. Move would be potentially disastrous for pts and families.	9/14/2017 10:27 PM
46	Just that they are vital for saving lives	9/14/2017 3:49 PM
47	I feel I have been hung out to dry with no one to call on to help me	9/14/2017 12:28 PM
48	Let down ,isolated and alone while on waiting list for Clinical Psychology and upset by lack of appointments able to be offered which hindered my recovery . I personallly would not have felt able to travel to Dundee for treatment which means patients like myself would be disadvantaged.	9/13/2017 10:31 PM
49	Generally the service has been good. In latter years,as budgets have become more stretched, the difference in availability and quality is discernible, particularly in terms of consistency. 20 years ago I had the same psychiatrist for years at a time; a rapport was built up, making the whole recovery process less stressful. Now, I see the same person for maybe 9 months, then they change to someone else; repeating yourself time after time becomes demoralising: i feel like a statistic, not a person. 20 years ago, I saw a psychologist on and off for a few years; he helped me more than anyone or anything else; he knew me and I trusted him because of this. The process of recovery was then set in an environment of stability; I could go away and work on stuff and know he'd be there in 2 months to discuss it all. He gave me loads of tools for self-help (mostly why I don't need such intensive care any more!) so, in the long run, the NHS investment in my allocated time with him has been cost effective. My biggest issues now are due to the fact that I live in a remote area; this helps in many ways as I don't have to engage (unsuccessfully) with the rat race so much, but it means I am unable to access services. The CPN visit is a 30 mile round trip; if I didn't drive, I wouldn't be able to get there as there are no buses. I used to attend OT crafty stuff, but this meant another 30 mile round trip. Fuel is expensive! I don't know the answer, but whatever the context may be, the more local the services the better.	9/13/2017 10:42 AM
50	Peers support very beneficial.	9/13/2017 9:12 AM
51	I believed you are "signed off" too early and as you are "Now well" it is difficult to then access services. There is little community team efforts most is dealt with by charities. While in hospital it is very rare a nurse actually speaks to you unless it's you chasing them regarding medication. It dosent always seem as it's because they are busy sometimes it just seems it might interfere with their sweets and coffee ! Very little information about visiting times or when meal times or what nursing teams or named nurse you have are given. Or it's given to you when you don't understand it.	9/12/2017 8:16 PM
52	Psychiatrists are essential but have too much power.	9/11/2017 5:45 PM
53	If you require a patient to give their views on the proposal I would be happy to do so. I have written a book for people with bi-polar and people who just want to understand more about it. It is called "Footprints in the Sand" and can be purchased on Amazon.	9/11/2017 3:29 PM
54	No	9/11/2017 3:20 PM

55	I think that the NHS mental health services are severely stretched and most people recovering from mental illness depend on outside agencies to help them with their recovery. I know his has been in my case by attending rehabilitation, occupational therapy etc.	9/11/2017 12:34 PM
56	If you close Moredun B it will definitely cost lives in Perth.If this decision is made by a group of politicians or even clinicians who have never experienced a mental health crisis it is a disgrace.	9/11/2017 12:03 PM
57	I am very worried for the wellbeing of friends and family in Tayside NHS. The services are being cut back and there are no services left in rural areas. People cannot access any service because they have all been taken away. It is alright for town people who invent the new rules. They live in cities and keep everything for themselves. In the countryside there's no GPs, no after hours and no local services to speak of anymore. People cannot feel safe in the countryside anymore and that is not right in Scotland.	9/11/2017 8:43 AM
58	Excellent care.	9/10/2017 10:46 PM
59	The mental health in Scotland should aim to be the best in the world.	9/10/2017 10:30 PM
60	The Perth crisis team are amazing and have saved my life. They. Wed to stay in Perth 24/7	9/10/2017 6:08 PM
61	The services are all about care and control you get fobbed off in a crisis lack of where to get support you are left unsure as what to do person centred planning was a good idea at the time but in reality you have no choices if you are under the care of the state	9/9/2017 2:00 AM
62	I feel that the service i was undee was really good but i was limited to 20 sessions with a psychiatrist. How can anyone say youll be better in a certain amount of sessions? Unrealistic and actually puts people off from asking for help	9/8/2017 10:23 PM
63	I lack any confidence in NHS mental health services. Services require more funding, more staff and staff to be less judgemental. Stigma against people with Personality Disorders is rife. CMHT seem stretched and hospital beds are only if you are on deaths door. Lacking any community therapeutic support locally. If you don't live in the city you are at a disadvantage due to lack of services.	9/8/2017 9:43 PM

2	primarily my wife and family. N.B I already attend various clinics (not mental health) which have been moved to Dundee. In the past whilst at PRI the time waiting to be seen less than half an hour. Travel time added perhaps on a bad day a couple of hours. I will be at least that in travel then finding the place, etc. depending on time of appointment i would set aside at least a day. For anyone working either as a patient or visitor this time scale is crucial. It would add to the length of healing time required.	10/5/2017 2:52 PM
